This 80-year-old female is being seen at home for follow-up on chronic health conditions. She denies any chest pain, shortness of breath or palpitations. Has request for medication refills. She is requesting to switch to Lasix as she states that hctz is not assisting with the bilateral lower extremity edema. The patient has lymphedema, sits up most of the time with her lower ext dependent despite education regarding the need for elevation of her lower extremities. Functionally, she states it is difficult to elevate her legs, she has been encouraged to lay down in the bed periodically during the day to assist with the edema. Again reiterated fluid restriction. Discussed need for labs to monitor her renal function due to the requested change in her diuretic.
The patient is requesting podiatry evaluation for calluses on her feet which she is unable to manage on her own, also is requesting physical therapy for assistance with ambulation due to decreased mobility and decline in functional status. The patient previously had a live-in caregiver however due to difficulties with the person, she is now living alone, she has a friend who does come almost daily to assist her.
The patient is still in the process of trying to find provider to get a power chair, she requires it for assistance with ADLs in her home. She currently has 1 which is too large and makes it difficult for her to be able to remain independent and maneuver it in her home. Now that she has no live in caregiver, she is needing to be more independent and have abilities to take care of her ADLs on her own. Functionally, she is unable to use a standard wheelchair as she is unableto propel it due to arthritis in her shoulders and also due to her excessive weight. The wheelchair is too wide for her home. The patient has the mental and physical capabilities to operate a power chair, she has 1 now and is able to use it safely in her home. Her home does have adequate access between the rooms and maneuvering space for her to use a chair. Using the power chair improves her ability to participate in her ADLs as she is home alone and she has proven the ability to use one to remain independent as she lives alone. The patient has limited ambulation abilities due to morbid obesity, BLE lymphedema and advanced arthritis in her knees and PN. A cane and walker do not meet her needs as it does not provide enough support and the patient is unable to ambulate more than a few steps to transfer making her a fall risk. She is able to stand from a seated position without assistance and get on her current power chair, she gets short of breath with ambulation and only is able to ambulate a few steps due to exertion as well as lower extremity pain.
